We investigated histological changes in lung tissue around a tracheobronchial silicone stent in 17 patients with bronchial carcinoma. The histological changes were observed macroscopically and the specimens were measured by laser scanning cytometry. The specimens of lung tissue were observed in two areas of the tracheobronchial silicone stents: around the tracheal silicone stent in 11 patients and around the bronchial silicone stent in six patients. In the lung tissue around the tracheal silicone stent, macrophages were attached to the silicone stent with silicotic nodules (8 of 11), and inflammatory cell infiltration of the fibrous tissue around the stent was found in all of them. Macrophages were adhered to the bronchial silicone stent with fibrous granulomas (5 of 6) and inflammatory cell infiltration was observed in all of them. These findings may suggest that the tissue changes surrounding the tracheobronchial silicone stent are more severe in the tracheal region than in the bronchial region.JN 01, JN 02 Selected, September 2005 Binary A R P E N U N D E R S T A N D I S T R I N G Jeanne Ostermann Time (code) is a binary equation, the inscription of a time of
