Maturity onset myopathy (Opem): the largest family of skeletal muscle myopathies associated with mitochondrial dysfunctions. In the muscle fibers of patients affected by the syndromic form of myopathy associated with mitochondrial dysfunction (or mitochondrial myopathies, Opem), no oxidative activity is observed. We suggest that the syndrome be referred to as the Opem (OPECD, OPAQID, MRP-II-3) myopathy. The disease is transmitted in an autosomal recessive manner. The clinical syndrome includes most of the muscular disorders observed in patients with mitochondrial dysfunctions, due to a defect of some enzyme complexes of the respiratory chain. The clinical heterogeneity is wide, but the presence of distal hypotonia and of muscular weakness in a distal and proximal muscle group are the main characteristics of the disease. The histopathological hallmarks of Opem myopathy are the presence of ragged red fibers and the absence of oxidative activity in the muscle fibers, characteristic of the severe impairment of mitochondria. In this review, we analyze the largest muscle myopathy group associated with mitochondrial dysfunction, with special focus on the clinical features and differential diagnosis of Opem myopathy.

Q: ajax update.php mysql/javascript Im trying to do a jQuery.ajax call to an.php file which loops through the results of a mysql query then changes the html of another div to show the table data. The problem is my php loops through the results, and echo them out into an array, but when the ajax calls 'sec_message' div then updates with the data it only updates it once. I have removed the loop for the call to work correctly, as for the moment the code doesnt work.
