The letter said he was "technically" a white boy because he "looked white to me," but the "ethnic society" of Thailand was not white and the boy's red hair indicated an Asian background. The letter suggested, because of his color and red hair, that the boy could have been Japanese, Chinese, "a Jew or an Arab," or a Jewish-Arab, according to the Reuters news agency. "The boy's hair is a mixture of red, black and white.... People say that the red hair is of Arab descent, but the black hair is of Japanese descent. Therefore, the boy's ethnic background is mostly Middle Eastern," the letter read, according to Reuters. Reported sick The boy was reported sick at a hospital, said authorities, who then brought him to Mae Ramat district of Phuket, in the southern island of Thailand. He was taken to the hospital's forensic department for identification but was sent home after three days of tests, the department's director said. An autopsy determined the boy died from "severe blunt trauma to the head," but it was not clear how he was killed, said Sakorn Putrasam, the director. If the body belonged to a child, it would have been sent to the Ministry of 3da54e8ca3
