• View statistics about the files and the peers • Set download and upload limits • Configure proxy settings This invention relates to a ski binding. More particularly, the invention relates to a ski binding having a braking system by which the free end of the ski bootstrap may be releasably held against the ski. In known ski bindings, the movement of the boot to and from the binding is governed by a bootstrap which is pivotally connected to the ski at a selected position. A releasable connector is provided at the lower end of the bootstrap which may be attached to the boot to hold the bootstrap in a locked position. Generally, the bootstrap is held in the locked position by an ejector pin or the like. In this manner, the bootstrap is maintained in a generally vertical position and the release of the boot to the binding involves the release of the bootstrap to raise the bootstrap and its end to the position in which it is locked to the ski. In the aforesaid type of binding, the release of the locking means releases the bootstrap, but since the bootstrap is locked in an upright position, it assumes a relatively stable position.

However, because of the length of the bootstrap, the free end of the bootstrap may be pivoted or bent under force and possibly become dislodged from the binding. This is especially true when the ski to which the binding is mounted is tracked in snow or ice, since the bootstrap has a relatively large amount of free travel and tends to form a tunnel through the snow or ice which collects moisture. Under such conditions, the bootstrap tends to pivot and drag through the snow, which also tends to lead to the release of the bootstrap. Inasmuch as the bootstrap is not effectively restrained when it is dislodged, it may bend or be knocked into a position in which it is no longer engaged by the binding. It has been proposed to provide a ski binding which effectively prevents the dislodgment of the bootstrap. In accordance with this proposed system, the bootstrap is pivoted by a jack screw mechanism, which is then held in position by a spring loaded cylinder. The cylinder is Thrombolytic action of t-PA on fibrin clots was monitored by the curve-fitting method. The concentration-time course of lysis was monitored by hemoglobin spectrophotometry. Mixtures of fibrinogen and platelet-poor plasma were used as representative experimental thrombus. The time course of the decrease in absorbance at 420 nm was analyzed by the mathematical curve-fitting method. Fitted mathematical functions were examined for best description of the experimental results. The derived parameters ( $\lambda_{max}$ ,  $t$  and  $A$ ) were as follows:  $\lambda_{max} = 627$  nm,  $t = 4.30$  min,  $A = 1.92$  mg/mL/min for initial steady state,  $\lambda_{max} = 627$  nm,
