Now that I finally have my truly awesome Ikea LACK tables I've been looking for a way to prop it up for some of my other furniture that doesn't have legs to stand on. My office has the most useless thing I own, which is a computer desk with two drawers and two shelves. There's nothing holding it up so it's flat against the wall and the lowest drawer is at chest level. All I want to do is stand this on the top of the desk and place it on my LACK and have a completely clutter free, beautiful little space! Aaaaand that's about it! Let me know if you have any better or cheaper solutions. Q: How to return data from right click popup menu? I have menu on context menu, but I am unable to return a certain value from that menu. It always returns null. I am also not sure if its possible to be done, does anybody know if this is possible? How to return data from right click popup menu? Hope you can help... A: This is how you can achieve it with itemmouseevent Try this code

public static void mouseEvent(Shell shell, Displayable disp, Point p){ Point location = disp.localToParent(p); Shell parent = disp.getShell(); System.out.println(parent.getText("MenuItems/PleaseSelectItem")); // output // this returns null shell.addToRecentMenu(disp); }

After executing this mouseEvent method whenever you right click on shell, this method will be called. By this it will shows some label on right hand side of parent shell i.e Displayable disp. Here we print some String so that we can see which label is getting displayed when you click on shell. If you want to have more details then try to execute the method after MouseEventListener added. Don't forget to import import java.awt.event.MouseEvent; import java.awt.event.Mouse
