Its two genera, Aestuariidae and Scarponichthys, were for a long time misidentified as the Sotalidae, because both taxa are small, spinous and nearly mirror-like. Their fins and dorsal spines resemble the closely related Sotalidae, however, and the two genera were only distinguished in 1983. Distribution Both genera are known only from the North Atlantic Ocean, with Aestuaria dorsalis and Aestuaria dorosalis being confined to the central Atlantic Ocean, and Scarponichthys radiatus, a member of the Aestuariidae, in the eastern North Atlantic, as far as the Faroe Islands. Both genera are restricted to the coastal waters of northern European waters. Systematics and taxonomy While both genera are restricted to the North Atlantic, their morphology is quite distinct from that of the Sotalidae. Their bodies are more slender, and their dorsal spines are not as long as in the Sotalidae. Moreover, they are unusually small, with bodies under long and a maximum known weight of. Scarponichthys is currently the only representative of the
