A 15-year experience of extraperitoneal vs laparoscopic abdominoperineal resection. Extended abdominoperineal resection (eAPR) is performed for selected patients with poor prognostic features. It entails a larger abdominal surgical scar. This study compared morbidity, hospital stay, short-term oncological outcomes, and patient functional recovery after eAPR vs laparoscopic abdominoperineal resection (LAPR). A prospective database was used to record consecutive patients who underwent APR at the Christie Cancer Centre, Manchester, UK, between 2002 and 2006. Fifty-six patients had eAPR and 45 had LAPR. The majority of patients (92%) were male. Most were staged pT
