It will read either single images, or a folder of images and produce a single EPS file per image, or a set of individual EPS files for all images in the folder. The EPS output contains all optional drawing objects like strokes, curves, text, images, etc, so no extra work is needed from the user to combine the various objects into the final EPS file. The EPS output file contains both vector-formatted drawing objects and rasterized images. The raster images can be either imported directly into a vector drawing application, or exported as a single raster image file. Various filters are supported, including grayscale and sepia, and the filter parameters can be saved and reused in subsequent conversions. All images are resized with a specified resolution before conversion. This program includes a batch mode that allows multiple image files to be processed. Automatic grouping of images into sets by folder name or file names is supported. The output EPS files are saved in a separate folder, so that multiple conversion runs from the same folder will result in multiple files with the same name.
