Adobe Dreamweaver CC 2018 V24.1.0.10163.rar.Influence of platelet activating factor on human respiratory mucosa. Platelet activating factor (PAF) is produced by inflammatory cells. In this study, human sinus, tracheobronchial, and pulmonary mucosa were incubated in the presence and absence of PAF. PAF was determined in the tissue extracts by an enzyme immunoassay. In addition, PAF receptor density was determined with 125I-PAF. PAF was released from the respiratory mucosa of patients with cystic fibrosis but not from patients with noncystic fibrosis bronchiectasis. PAF activity was not detected in sinus tissues. However, PAF was released by extracts of tracheal and bronchial mucosa in concentrations that correlated with increased PAF receptor density. These findings suggested that PAF activity is dependent on receptor density. The local production of PAF by inflammatory cells is a key mediator of inflammatory reactions in the airway mucosa and may play an important role in the path 1cdb36666d
