Hereditary recurrent epidermolysis bullosa and dermatitis herpetiformis are both rare diseases with autosomal dominant transmission. We present the case of a 2-year-old boy who presented with erosions of the skin at birth. After several episodes of blisters, lesions healed with scars but persistence of scarring at the age of 2 years. Dermatitis herpetiformis was diagnosed. A skin biopsy showed epidermal atrophy with subepidermal blister formation, blister content effacement and lymphocytic infiltrate in the dermis. An unspecific pattern of epidermal dysplasia and blisters is the key diagnostic feature in hereditary recurrent epidermolysis bullosa. Although cases with the same histological pattern as in this patient have been reported, we report the first case of dermatitis herpetiformis concomitant with hereditary recurrent epidermolysis bullosa.
