The frequency of

EM is likely to be less than 50 per 100,000 persons per year. EM has a slight male predominance (M:F, 1:1.25). Worldwide, it occurs in persons of all ages. The diagnosis of EM is readily made on clinical grounds. However, histopathologic examination is necessary to exclude less common etiologies. Other terms frequently used to describe skin eruptions with classic clinical features are erythema annulare centrifugum (EAC), erythema marginatum centrifugum (EMC), dermatitis annulare centrifugum (DAC), erythema multiforme minor, erythema multiforme major, and erythema multiforme annularis. EMF is commonly observed in infants and children and often has the histopathologic features of an ec
