Q: Why is Azure Table Storage's LastModified property always returning zero? I'm using the following code to get the last modified date from Azure Table Storage: `bool lastModified = tableStorage.TryGetItemMetadata("test", "testdata", out var lastModifiedItem) && lastModifiedItem.LastModified.DateTime != DateTime.MinValue && lastModifiedItem.LastModified.DateTime >= fromDate`; I thought this would basically check for the last update of the table "testdata", and if it found one, return the date. The Table "testdata" has the "lastmodified" property as a DateTime. So, I thought the if condition would actually return true if the property was set. But the condition always returns false. When I write to the table "testdata" in my C# code, the lastModified property is always set to DateTime.MinValue. Why is this happening? A: Microsoft Azure Table Storage does not support Create and Read operations on tables. If you want to read the last modified date of a table, use the Last-Modified HTTP header. You should use Last-Modified header instead of LastModified.DateTime. .9535 - -2.8235. Let $z = t + 6.0639$. Let $s = z - 8$. Round s to 3 decimal places. 0.008 Let q be $-1^3/(-9)^0$. [@Schmidt2016] They found that the excitation is dominated by the plume.\ Recently, Ref. [@Araujo2017] observed a similar plume-dominated excitation in the decay of a $^{56}\text{Ni}(3/2^-)$ state at 11.5 MeV towards the 2^+ ground state of ^{56}Co , which is produced by neutron-induced fission of ^{252}Cf [@Jasinska1990]. It will be an interesting problem to extend these kind of analyses to other nuclei, in particular to heavier $N=50$ isotopes. These nuclei have at least two additional neutron-hole levels, the $1/2^-$ and $5/2^-$ states at about 12.3 and 11.6 MeV, respectively. In case of ^{52}Fe , the $5/2^-$ state already decays into ground state, so no excitation of the $5/2^-$ state can be probed. The $1/2^-$ state, however, is expected to decay to the ground state of ^{52}Mn , which is isomeric ($E_x=0.8\text{ MeV}$). Measurements on $^{52}\text{Mn}(n,f)$ (or $^{52}\text{Mn}(\alpha,f)$) therefore should be possible by neutron-capture. This work was funded by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft through grant CRC 960, project A13. The experimental data were collected at GSI, Darmstadt, with the help of Michaela Göppert and Anja Sakulich. At a press
