Proxyah is a basketball simulation video game for the PC, PS3 and Xbox360 (PC). Players attempt to recruit players from the college ranks then coach them and develop them into star basketball players. The game uses a College Men's basketball recruiting and player development system. Players will have to fill a roster with 27 players and a coaching staff, lead the squad to the NCAA tournament or work their way through a pre-season that sees them play against several college teams. Proxyah is an in-depth simulator that deals with both the actual strategy and business side of basketball. Players will find themselves at a bookstore where they can browse and buy players, research and recruit them, choose logos and uniforms and sign contracts. They can also pay dues to the National Basketball Association in order to level up and unlock better team stats. Players are then required to coach the team, to monitor the game and reward players if they perform well in games or compete against rivals, take on opponents from the NBA or NCAA in weekly online games, use a practice facility which houses their players, gym, weight room and practice court, and attend player meetings, player trade-ins and other business issues. Proxyah is a basketball game that puts you at the helm of a team and allows you to control every aspect of the team's on court performance. In the college world of Proxyah it's not whether you can bring home the trophy but how you use the team to build a name for yourself. The depth of the game and the longevity of each player makes Proxyah a must have for any basketball video gamer. A rich sci-fi story, dynamic tactical battles and tactical turn-based strategy featuring the most beautiful classical turn-based game in the genre that will keep you immersed in it for hours. Major Features: – Intuitive interface and easy to use mechanics that allow you to concentrate on your strategy. – Excellent pixel art graphics, great sound and music. – Role playing and strategy game at the same time, with great atmosphere. – Highly detailed anime-style cutscenes. – Full voice acting. Gameplay:- Turn-based tactical battles where you only control the units, instead of losing control over the whole game.- Two unique game modes: Story and Endless Battle.- You can spend the points you earn for each mission to buy different weapons and upgrades for your characters. Graphics:- A very detailed anime-style environment. - A nice soundtrack with great dialogues. - The game is a constant joy to see since you get to see every small details in the game art. License: The game is available under the GNU GPLv3 and is published with the GNU General Public License version 3, which means free as in beer and also free as in speech (please check wikipedia for more information about the GNU GPLv3). Screenshots: Edit: Not that we can actually make a decision yet, but from the comments we see that we need to clarify something. The game is available for free as in beer. However, it also requires getting a legal copy of the game (we do not distribute or sell copies of the game). AFAIK you cannot redistribute the game in a way that can be used to make money or be registered as a product for any kind of a service which can make money for a company. So it's free, but not free as in speech or free as in beer. There are some exceptions like when companies offer a version of their games that they distribute for free, but it's not generally possible to use these versions to register your game as a product. Edit: This clarification was added in response to the comments in the thread, in order to make it clear that the game is available for free as in beer, not as in speech or free as in beer. I want a "Halo Wars" style game with the narrative of Alundra 3 and XCOM: Enemy Unknown. A standalone story with a long story mode, in which you "direct" the

p: New Look In this post I'll be changing the look of the Shoot Trip Diep site. This site was originally designed by Deacon from creativeiantrademark. It used to be an ICBM IV community before we decided to expand and make it single author community. Some of you old timers probably remember it but for those of you who are new or are forgetting it it's like the Troika before the Troika. You will know what I mean if you've played around with web page builders. I'm changing out the template and logo for a new nice and fresh look. Hopefully this will give the photo galleries and the forums a fresh feel. In addition to this I'm starting to let people know about the new Shoot Trip. The new Shoot Trip is now called Shoot Trip Diep. This was done in order to make it easier for people to search for topics because the previous Shoot Trip Diep was confuse for the Shoot Trip. There is a still a Shoot Trip Diep but this new one is all photography related. The new Shoot Trip Diep is mostly spoken in English. It may take me a bit to make all the content from the old Shoot Trip Diep stuff available on the new Shoot Trip Diep but I'll do my best to make it happen. The text within the top banner is also a work in progress. I have plans to change it into something more dynamic but that may take a bit longer. Eventually I will get back to all you input on it! One of the differences that I will be making will be the use of Scheduler in order to up and coming live event posters to be able to post their events online. I'll be using this to assist with scheduling events and solo photographer discussions. Stay tuned for more information and updates on the new site and as always comment to let me know what you think. Discussion Jerry this is a great new look. Will you be talking to Deacon about the text in the banner and menu at all? Because it's in a footer and template in the actual site that is over two years old. I'm trying to get Deacon to help make the banner including the right search feature work (which he says he's working on). There are a lot of things that you can't exactly do without the right person or company to make it happen Clinical trials are designed to test the efficacy of a novel or existing therapy on a particular disease. A successful outcome will hopefully indicate that the therapy is effective in preventing or treating the disease. Very often, however, clinical trial results are inconclusive because the approach being tested is not able to distinguish between the potential action of the new therapy and the impact of other, usually unknown factors that may influence the disease. It is critically important to identify such influences in order to establish the appropriate therapeutic regimen. The causes for the failure of clinical trials in rheumatic diseases are multifactorial. Primary, they include rare diseases, which are more difficult to study. Secondary, there are highly heterogeneous diseases where the numerous biochemical and physiological responses associated with them will potentially confound trial outcomes. The success rate of clinical trials in rheumatic diseases is increased by use of the disease-modifying antirheumatic drug (DMARD) as an active comparator. This approach allows one to determine whether a novel therapy might be more effective than a standard therapy, irrespective of the mechanism of action of the new therapy. However, using a DMARD may introduce unacceptable adverse effects, and the active comparator may be ineffective. Challenges in the design and analysis of clinical trials have been discussed in a recent article on
