The annual meeting of the International Society for Augmented Reality (ISAR) is being held for the first time in China, where its center, the new Institute at Nanjing University, is just a stone's throw from the famous ancient city. Although virtual reality, or what many people have taken to calling "mixed reality," is not new, the emergence of increasingly realistic and sophisticated hardware and software is raising the bar for what could be virtual, according to organizers. According to the organizers, the event will open up the possibility of virtual reality being used in the real world. "We see ourselves as pioneers in the field of artificial and mixed reality,” said Ravi Ramamoorthy, a computer scientist and co-director of the institute, who will serve as head of the meeting. “The question is at what level — whether the virtual world will be real or fake.”Q: How to get this HTML template to load?
