High-density lipoproteins stimulate the Ca²⁺-dependent phospholipase A2 of rat heart: direct interaction with a phosphorylated protein. By using an anti-phospholipase A2 (anti-PLA2) serum, a Ca²⁺-dependent PLA2 of approximately 39 kDa and a phosphorylated protein with an apparent mol wt of 35 kDa have been identified in the particulate fractions of rat heart. High-density lipoproteins (HDL) stimulate the Ca²⁺-dependent PLA2 activity of the particulate fraction of rat heart in a dose-dependent manner. This stimulatory effect was observed with rat HDL (rHDL) and with human HDL. The optimal concentration of HDL to induce the PLA2 activity was 1 mg of protein/ml of reaction mixture. The stimulation of PLA2 activity was also observed in the presence of 25 microM Ca²⁺ and a minimal concentration of lipids. No stimulation was observed when 100 microM Ca²⁺ and 10 micrograms of protein was used. When fractions (d 1.063-1.25 g/ml) were isolated from the rHDL column and assayed for the PLA2 activity, the fraction of d 1.125 g/ml was found to be the fraction responsible for stimulation. The d 1.125 g/ml fraction was found to have strong affinity for Ca²⁺ and inhibited by lipocompounds. The stimulatory activity of rHDL was found to be at the expense of the d 1.125 g/ml fraction of the rHDL. Thus the results suggest that Ca²⁺, Mg²⁺, anionic lipocompounds, and phosphorylated proteins present in the d 1.125 g/ml fraction could be involved in the stimulation of PLA2 activity. This suggests a possible interaction between the phosphorylated protein and the PLA2. The effect of rHDL on PLA2 activity was inhibited by depleting the phosphorylated proteins with Al³⁺ and/or EGTA. The activity of PLA2 could not be inhibited by depleting the Ca²⁺ with EGTA. This suggests that the stimulation of PLA2 activity by rHDL is due to the interaction of Ca²⁺ and 1cdb36666d
