The urge to buy something — anything — at any cost should be immediately re-identified as a symptom of chronic psychological illness. And I am not alone in this assertion. In 2008, the Massachusetts Department of Health released a report concluding that 26% of the state's residents suffer from some form of obsessive compulsive disorder. Is there a correlation between buying things and illness? The answer is yes. Unfortunately, the report from the Massachusetts Health and Hospital Association (MHA) has been forgotten. The situation was made worse by the fact that Gov. Patrick has made some very good points about health care in Massachusetts. That said, his newfound urgency about mental health has been overshadowed by his well thought out and articulated views on health care.
