What's new in Porcelain Mask:

The Porcelain Mask is an experimental project I started in 2012. I wanted to use this paint shader to create a mask that can be easily painted on, and that shows up as part of a video clips like masking an actor in a video production. The Original Idea Here's what I imagined with the original idea: it basically served as a laser weapon that focuses a relatively small cone of photons to perform the laser effect. With some time, I made it more customizable: Someone could use a regular desktop or laptop LCD to get any effect, and being strapped to their face, their movement would be controlled by their facial expressions. They could then be used as a mask to protect artists from damage during the production process. Towards this idea, I did a prototype… The Build I started this project with the idea of getting back into working with 3D modeling, but I eventually shifted gears to focus on using Cinder for desktop fabrication. I used Zircoplane.io to help me order all the parts needed and have them sent to my apartment. The laser cutters were also from zircoplane. To do all the production work and joinery, I used Arduino Due for mechanical manipulations and 3D fusion for the actual part cutting. I reached the point where I was ready to put the mask together into one piece, but I needed a few tensile pieces that would allow me to attach the mask to the forehead via elastic bands. I first struggled with using PVC pipes, but ran out of ideas on other materials, so I just mimicked one like a tissue box. Some might be disinclined to use vacuum-forming as the making process for such a structure, but for my specific purpose, the volume of the shot would be relatively small and the cost of making it was remarkably low. You don't have to have access to a shop with a giant vat with vacuum forming machines unless making a giant one. You can start with PVC pipes and 1.25mm sheets at home so they can be complete parts in the future. The paper mask prototype had a really hard time pulling off the frame, so using interfacing paper might have been a really bad idea. Nevertheless, I tested the structure and could confirm that I could actually go ahead and use this to create paper masks or a mask out of some other material. How it works My prototype was roughly
