A 24-year-old woman was referred to our hospital due to a tumor of the right ethmoid bone. The patient had been suffering from Crohn's disease since age of 18. The tumor was diagnosed as a mucosa-associated lymphoid tissue (MALT) lymphoma. Her Crohn's disease did not respond to treatment with oral prednisolone and sulfasalazine. After surgical resection of the tumor, she received radiotherapy and systemic chemotherapy. The mucosal atrophy persisted, however, and she was still suffering from Crohn's disease at 5 years after her diagnosis of Crohn's disease.Scientists create 'self-healing' black carbon for the aviation industry (Nanowerk News) Sensors that can quickly detect oil spills or warn of a hazardous condition on an airplane could be a key to resolving climate change as the world's fleet of commercial aircraft doubles to nearly 7,000 planes every year. Instead of sputtering on the runway, those planes could land to make an emergency landing, or perhaps just skip a flight so the plane and its passengers aren't stuck on a distant strip. Sensors to let pilots know their landing gear is stuck or that they're running low on fuel could prevent these situations. But the sensors, along with other components of an airplane, are getting worn out, and it's hard for them to keep up with the sheer pace of expanding air travel. That's where engineers at Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (Berkeley Lab), in a collaboration with the U.
