About The Game – Inexistence is a story-driven, 3D indie action-platformer. Fight your way through the grand adventure that is your life. Your starting point can be changed. You can decide if you want to find out what happened to your (maybe not so) existence or if you just want to survive. You can die, but you can also live. It's up to you. Watch this video to learn more: The development of this game started 1 years ago as an experiment. The development was supported by a beta program to test the different areas of the game as well as test the gameplay and mechanics of the game. In the last year, the development of the game picked up and has become the work we can present to the public today. The game has evolved so much, that we are also not 100% sure anymore if we are going to release the game under the name Inexistence. Gameplay: The player has many ways to attack their enemies. Auwah and Blackhole Weapons can be also use to break the objects. The player can also jump by pressing space or Z to achieve higher platforms. The player can also use the weapon to climb on walls. Let's Talk about the Features: The Game is more than just a game. It's a little life simulator. The player is about to begin a journey through their life in different environments. Some of the environments are natural (meadow, forest, etc), some are man-made (houses, gym, etc). Most of the gameplay is optional, but it will guide the player to the ending to the story. The Game has a lot of easter eggs that the player can discover during the game. One of them are a custom font, which allows the player to add his own text to the screen. Some characters are also custom-made, and can be customized to look as you want. The Game is in English and will have Japanese and Chinese localizations. Features My game? What game? If you liked my game so far, then you have probably spotted that I can't do it alone. That's where you come in.

Coffin Dodgers is a 2D single player action/driving game where you try to get the highest score by destroying the player's home field while your opponents do the same. You start the game with a mobility scooter, which is the safest way to travel. Your goal is to find a new place to live, preferably far away from your home town where you've already found a place. Over the course of the game, you'll become more powerful by acquiring new mobility scooters and destroy more and more of your opponents' homes. And when that's not enough, you can also build your own home and destroy the other player's home. Your goal is to use all your mobility scooters to drive as far as you can before you die, while destroying your opponents' homes and moving on as quickly as possible. All the moves are right in front of you, so no sliding towards the edge of your scooter when you're trying to drive forward, because your scooter will fall off the edge, but also no dangerous backflips, because you might miss the scooter, take a dive, damage yourself or push your neighbors out of your house. If you manage to get your opponent's home before your, you move on to the next map. Coffin Dodgers features 4 different game modes:

- Rush: A race to find the opponent's home.
- Attrition: A race to reach the opponent's home.
- Inferno: A race against the clock on a specified map.
- Navi: A map-specific multi-scooter race

Coffin Dodgers has different game modes, each based on a map that is only available on one map, such as a different soundtrack for a specific map. Features:

- Multiple game modes
- 4 multiplayer maps
- A different soundtrack for each map
- Career mode with infinite replayability
- Local and Online Multiplayer (only for those platforms that support it)
- 12 simple controls with intuitive and easy-to-use design
- A player stats system to keep track of your achievements
- 3D visuals on demand
- Procedurally generated levels
- No microtransactions
- Ranks and levels to climb
- Lots of achievements
- Leaderboards for you and your friends to see
- Localization available for several languages
- Free to play but with optional in-game purchases
- No ads

If you're already ready for a journey into the world of life-detecting magnet technology, or you're just looking for a good first time experience, we've got a guide for you. Read on to get the gist of where we've been and where we're headed. Reviews "Life Detector" is the first attempt in a series of games that allow players to interact with and control a monitor attached to a randomly generated urban environment that simulates the growth of a living city. Each session in the game is a short escape game in which the player must survive for a number of hours. The game contains elements of adventure, shooter, and strategy. Life-detecting technology is a field of research that allows humans to detect lifeforms in a vacuum. All that's needed is a process called magnetic telemetry, which makes the system possible. Where previous technology could only detect water and other things of specific gravity, magnet is able to detect much more, including organic matter, carbon, DNA, nitrogen, oxygen, and much more. Because life seems to make life in most cases, life-detecting technology is quite common among the most advanced countries. Life Detector was made from a real life concept. We played with the idea of combining the concepts of driving a car into a tunnel, time-sensitive detection, and adventure game elements. The game is developed using Unity, a 3D engine, and because it is the engine used by Unity, using the game is easy. You can play the game with a controller or keyboard only. We felt that the player had to be able to control the machines, and the best way to do that is by having the character be able to control the machines with an internal control mechanism. We felt that the player's control of the machines was too simple, so we were able to add a command system that allows the character to control a set of machines to interact with the environment. Life Detector was released on Steam on December 31, 2018.
