The recent appearance of infections with extensively drug-resistant TB and AIDS-related opportunistic infections in patients with advanced HIV infection has increased the urgency of understanding the mechanisms of drug resistance. This application is a competitive renewal of a T-32 training grant, which has provided pre- and postdoctoral training in infectious diseases for 5 years. The program is designed to train 2 pre- and 2 postdoctoral trainees. Pre-doctoral trainees will be recruited from the Colleges of Medicine, Pharmacy and Arts and Sciences of the Johns Hopkins University. Postdoctoral trainees will be selected from a broad area of biomedical research expertise. The trainees will pursue a program of study (4 years for pre- doctoral trainees; 3-4 years for postdoctoral trainees) that will provide them with broad knowledge of the basic mechanisms of infectious diseases. During the pre-doctoral phase they will receive formal coursework, training in responsible conduct of research, and experiences in research, laboratory techniques, and grant 1cdb36666d
