Endorsement information The Bank of Canada (BoC) uses the following procedure for evaluating endorsement applications for Canada Savings and Mortgage Bonds: Step 1 : If you are an investor, look at the information on this site. If you have a bond certificate you're selling, you can sell it here. You can also exchange a bond certificate for a coupon version of a bond at a lower exchange rate. If you're not selling or exchanging a bond certificate, proceed to step 2. Step 2 : Fill out the application by clicking here. You can also download a fully completed application from the online account. If you're not yet registered, please register here. Step 3 : Upload your bank statement or proof of receipt and bank statement. The bank statement must be dated prior to the date you want the application to be effective. Step 4 : Submit the completed application by following these instructions or by e-mailing canbond@bankofcanada.ca. Complete applications will be processed within 10 to 14 business days. Step 5 : You will get a message confirming that we have received your application and that the endorsement is being processed. You may also receive an email asking for additional documents, but it's unlikely

I'm coding with Python and matplotlib. The output of the model is a list of strings, each string is a p value for some significance level. The issue I'm facing is that in order to plot the output I have to type an individual command for each significance level. My question is, what is the best way to generate a plot that can be filled by each output? Code: `p=matplotlib.pyplot as plt plt.scatter(x,y) plt.plot(p) plt.show()` Where x and y are some features that are mapped from the features used to train the model. A: This is generally the easiest way of plotting multiple p-values. For each number, calculate it and plot it. The plotting isn't done in any order, which makes it much easier to "fill the gaps" if there are any. # Draw all the p-values `plt.figure() plt.scatter(x,y) for p in pvals: plt.plot(p)` The order of the p-values will be important if there is some pre-determined order that you want to maintain, or if your p-values aren't in a grid. Q: Append text to EditText in Android I'm working with android. I have 2 EditText boxes. When the user clicks on the first one, I want the second one to display "Please select an option:" and when the user clicks on the second one, it should display "Selected option:" and then any other text. What is the best way to go about this? Thanks in advance! A: You can use
