The data – previously used in real-time to power Player Impact Engine’s animations and creation of complex movements, the HyperMotion technology uses it to track players’ physicality and enhance movement in FIFA Ultimate Team. It also provides a more authentic basis for tackle animations and an improved tackling animation hitbox. Developed by EPIC Games, the studio that lead the development of FIFA 19’s ‘Real Player Motion Technology’, the team behind FIFA 21’s ‘Soccer Player Tackles’, and in close partnership with leading sports apparel maker adidas, it is the only technology currently available for use in FIFA 22. New features and gameplay improvements • Player Impact Engine (PIE) FIFA 22 adds a whole new depth to player impact, delivering hyper-realistic player animations and the ability to influence a player’s state of being. In addition to the core four classes – Defender, Midfielder, Forwards and Goalkeeper – the engine now features three more advanced gameplay modes: • Interaction (AI) control – The engine can now interpret how the player acts during in-game actions such as chasing a loose ball, going for a tackle or attempting to make a long pass. This means there is no longer any need to include your own AI movement control behaviour, for greater play flexibility. In this mode players react naturally to on-ball actions and specific player parameters can be configured for each player type. • Player impact – In this mode, PIE automatically updates the player’s state of being in response to the class level and how the player acts in the game. This allows the player to more effectively evolve their attributes and behaviours as the player’s development path unfolds. • Teammate performance – in this mode, the player can influence how their team mates perform in-game actions. This is particularly useful when players are outnumbered and need to change their team mates’ on-ball behaviours. • Full-bodied, reactive player movement – more fluid and realistic player movement, powered by multiple levels of motion capture data • Flexible, responsive passing Powered by Rylo, FIFA 22 delivers the highest quality passing in a FIFA game. It makes it faster and more accurate, while also enabling the player to pass the ball quicker and with more options, such as short, chip, and through balls. The engine
