English Text In Malayalam | Bible | Old Testament | Holy Bible | Traditio.[Effect of ceftriaxone on serum level of angiotensin-converting enzyme in human subjects (author's transl)]. Although angiotensin converting enzyme (ACE) is important in the metabolism of bradykinin, its serum activity is conventionally considered only in relation to the electrolytic imbalance. We previously described that high activity of ACE in serum was observed in human subjects after administration of ceftriaxone, an antibiotic. In the present study, using a radioimmunoassay method, we investigated the effects of ceftriaxone on ACE activity and its serum level in human subjects. Although the peak level of serum ACE activity occurred at 1 day after administration of ceftriaxone (8 g per day for 4 days), serum ACE activity returned to normal 4 days after cessation of administration. The same tendency was noted when the subjects received ceftriaxone (4 g per day for 4 days). However, serum ACE activity remained higher than normal 4 days after administration of 2 g ceftriaxone per day. The serum level of ACE activity also remained higher than normal for 7 days after cessation of administration of 4 g ceftriaxone per day. This result shows that ceftriaxone can cause high activity of ACE in serum over a long time in humans. Greetings, Captains!
