I have an object that can be created and used on any thread by the application that is using it. Should I avoid using a local copy on the main thread and instead release/nil it after using it? A: It's generally better to avoid locking. What if you created a copy of an object and then realized it was actually a bad idea and destroyed it? Locking prevents the object from being freed until it has been released. It's a nice safety net, but sometimes you need to just "let go" of an object. If you try to reclaim it, you can get a "double-free". Q: custom page name for list How can I change the page name for my lists in Sharepoint Online? I'm using Sharepoint Designer 2016 and currently I'm adding pages by going to "Pages" under "Manage" and then from there "Add a page" which then gives me a page like this. If i choose "Pages and libraries", it gives me an option to add a page from there which i guess is the URL it's using. But that page is just a little blank page with a URL and no content on it at all. A: Customise the Page URL (or Library URL) by following these instructions: Open a SharePoint site Select Page Management from the top navigation menu bar Click on Pages Click on Edit Template... in the top right corner Select a new template by choosing From the menu that appears, choose a page template from the Available Templates section Press OK and save the page.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for processing a number of audio samples, such as human speech, in a computationally efficient manner.

2. Description of the Related Art In general, when processing audio signals, such as human speech signals, the speech samples are continuously converted into an audio format and analyzed to extract a number of parameters such as pitch frequency, speaking rate, and the like. The parameter values are then compared with previously stored or input parameter values, in order to determine whether the speech is a match to a known speech. If a match is made, then the speech is deemed to be a known sample, and the corresponding parameter values are stored for later use in identifying the speech. One drawback with the conventional speech signal processing techniques is that the computer programs employed to process the audio samples are relatively slow, and are therefore unable to operate quickly enough to handle high-speed audio signals such as video signals, which require processing at a much higher rate. A further drawback is that conventional speech signal processing techniques are unable to accommodate the significant variation in rate and amplitude of human speech.
