The c-src gene encodes an 82-kilodalton protein, pp60src, which is the oncoprotein of the Harvey and Rous sarcomas. The pp60src protein contains tyrosine kinase activity that phosphorylates a variety of cellular substrates. pp60src can be autophosphorylated at tyrosine 527, and several proteins of Mr approximately 60,000 are found in pp60src immunoprecipitates. pp60src is widely expressed in human tissue and at high levels in rat, mouse, and human fetal tissues. It has been proposed that pp60src is a protooncoprotein which is synthesized in cells and translocated to the nucleus where it phosphorylates nuclear proteins. Although the function of pp60src is unknown, it is involved in the control of cell proliferation and differentiation. These functions may reflect its role as an intracellular mediator of mitogenic signals. The focus of this research is an evaluation of community mental health center (CMHC) services to develop a process to assist in the placement of an individual by a CMHC in a community mental health center (CMHC) facility from the family's community. The work will be accomplished in three phases. The first phase will involve a cost-benefit analysis of a process to facilitate placement of an individual as opposed to an inpatient hospitalization. This analysis will be developed for the state of Virginia which has a two tiered mental health system. The analysis will be performed utilizing the same information in two systems one a Medicaid recipient system and the other a hospital system. In the second phase of Measurement tools may be used to assess the outcomes of treatment and thus to determine whether to continue the treatment. As an example, we used the "Model for Assessing Pathways for Mothers with Substance Use and Their Children", developed by the National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University to assess the pathways of women who used drugs and their children. INTRODUCTION {#s1} ===== Posterior interosseous nerve injury from blunt trauma can occur in a variety of different scenarios. First described in 1904 by Goerre and Monaghan, it is the rarest of all musculoskeletal injuries.[@R01] The incidence is 0.05--2.8% with a wide variation in the literature.[@R02]-[@R09] We report a case of a posterior interosseous nerve injury of the little finger secondary to direct trauma due to a dive of a non-contact sportsman. CASE REPORT {#s2} ===== A 31-year-old non-contact sport jumper, without previous injury, brought to the emergency room with pain and swelling of the right little finger. After diving to the ground, he directly hit his finger on the ground. He immediately felt numbness and pain of the entire finger. He refused to go to the emergency room and the swelling continued until the next day. A physical examination revealed swelling and painful limitation of the ulnar deviation, dorsal flexion and extension of the little finger, the latter being more painful, and the Little Fingers Flexion Squeeze Test was negative. An MRI of the finger showed an entrapment of the posterior interosseous nerve with significant supracondylar swelling 6d1f23a050
