Friendstube.com --Spa Releases Details Of Inappropriate Access Pamela Timms, "Queen of the Valley" winner of The Spa Xtreme Winter Ultra. It's no secret that the Spa industry enjoys a wide array of amenities, from private luxury spas to public bathhouses and hotels. The biggest news of the year was the release of Spa's Access, a sex-positive resource guide that's helping to dispel the myth that day spas are filled with sex offenders. The new book explains the difference between friendly peep shows and illegal peep shows and gives location information for the "tastefully elegant bathhouses" that might not be safe for children. The guide also includes details on the types of sexual services offered at day spas, including massage, body treatments, foot baths and steam rooms. The book is available for purchase and download on the internet at spaaccess.com for $20. "I think that having an open dialogue about sexuality is a natural progression for a spa that's a business," says Patti Nycz, the founder and executive director of The Spa Xtreme (TSX) nightlife events held every December in which the company provides entertainment at various spas. TSX has released the new book as part of a larger effort to combat the misconception that it's dangerous for kids to spend time with day spas. "It's basically a little book that shows that it's a spa industry that's very sophisticated," Nycz says. "We thought this would be a good way to give the public a little more info." According to Nycz, it's not only a common misconception that day spas are dangerous for kids, it's also the responsibility of spa owners to remove any children who may be uncomfortable with the sexual services provided at their establishments. "It's really incumbent on the spa owner to take steps to protect children and remove them from the premises if they're uncomfortable," Nycz says. "If you have a contract with the spa that they're not supposed to have children on the premises, that's a safe position." SpaAccess.com also provides information on how
