The present invention relates to a laminar paint product comprising a surface carrier of thermoplastic material. The currently known laminar paint compositions generally comprise polymers or plastics, and colorants, frequently containing a solvent, on one or both sides. In a first step, the colorants and the solvent are applied to the substrate, for example by spraying, brushing, knife or roller application. This step is preferably carried out at temperatures below 100°C. The substrate is then dried and only then is the second, or the so-called carrier, polymer layer applied. This layer is generally applied at higher temperatures, because the carrier is required to be at least somewhat soft and deformable. This carrier layer usually contains inorganic pigments which cause abrasion. The known laminar paint compositions have serious drawbacks in that, on the one hand, the application of the colorants and the solvent, sometimes referred to as a basecoat layer, takes a long time. In many cases, the basecoat layer has to be dried in a time ranging from 1 to 60 minutes at temperatures ranging from 50 to 160°C. This is particularly disadvantageous if the vehicle is to be filled in under conditions which are at least as gentle as are permitted by law for fluid vehicle filling, for example, by manual filling or rinsing, and also in that on the other hand, the basecoat layer of polymer is very often very sensitive to and easily influenced by environmental effects such as heat, UV radiation, mechanical stress and humidity, the carrier layer often being very sensitive to and rapidly deteriorating. This may be attributed to a curing process at temperatures between 80 and 160°C. Moreover, the known systems are generally very complicated to produce, having a high production cost and with a low production capacity. A laminar paint product comprising a carrier layer which is applied at elevated temperature and which softens and deforms on heating to temperatures in the range from 50 to 160°C. is described in German Patent DE 197 06 688. In this case, the carrier layer consists of a combination of a thermoplastic material and a silicone
