This invention relates to substituted hydrazinylcarbonylamino and carbamoylphenylazocarboxylic acids and their N-oxides and salts, and a process for producing the same. More particularly, this invention relates to useful hydrazinylcarbonylamino and carbamoylphenylazocarboxylic acids and their N-oxides and salts for forming antitumor agents and a process for producing such compounds. It is known that various hydrazine derivatives have various medicinal effects such as an effect to exterminate parasites. Further, there are the medicinal effects to exterminate parasites, to promote blood circulation and to prevent aging of the brain and the like. It is also known that the hydrazine derivatives have various medicinal effects as described above. Further, the hydrazine derivatives are the compounds which can be formed from a starting material such as an amino acid or a peptide having a mercapto group or an amino group as a halogenating agent. As a result of extensive investigations on the hydrazine derivatives as described above, there have been found hydrazine derivatives which have antitumor activity, and then various proposals have been proposed about those compounds. For example, in Japanese patent publication No. 53059/72, there is disclosed a method for producing a compound represented by the following formula (II) ##SPC4## and in Japanese patent publication No. 1259/78, there is disclosed a method for producing a compound represented by the following formula

Function The protein encoded by this gene is a member of the B-cell lymphoma 2 (Bcl-2) protein family, whose members are characterized by their ability to inhibit apoptosis. This protein has been found to interact with the cytochrome bc1 complex, and may play a role in regulating apoptosis of mitochondria-related cells. The problem of choosing optimal conditions for kidney transplantation is complex and requires thorough investigation of the function of the donor organ and technique of perfusion. An early determination of the problem of cold/warm ischemia is to note, that optimal graft function is possible only after perfusion by blood with temperature of 20-30 degrees C. Under these conditions, the kidneys of the donors usually undergo no ischemia. Subnormothermic perfusion is not always optimal for the function of the graft and is associated with the high risk of irreversible damage to the organ. It is possible to use selective perfusion at 20-25 degrees C with the 6d1f23a050
