NEPTUNE.Â .Q: Handle files using prepared statements I have written a program which takes a file and reads it line by line. I want to store the content of this file in a MySQL database using prepared statements. So that if some of the lines of the input file contain an error and cause an exception to be thrown, only the affected lines will be stored in the database.

To handle input files in this way, I need to access only a single data base table row, but need to get all lines of the file into the SQL statement from which the row is read. How can I accomplish this?

A: You can store each line of the file using a single INSERT. Then you can either catch the PHP Exception to handle input validation problems or loop through the array of fields that have data, and do a select to get the correct records. To make it more robust, you would want to ensure that if multiple queries are issued, they are separated by commas. Clipperz Casino Sports Betting Interactive Sports Betting In The UK And Ireland At Clipperz Casino
