A: I think that would be the correct interpretation. The word "greater" doesn't seem to be used in conjunction, but rather "commander in chief." According to my copy of Webster's Dictionary, the word "commander" means: a person who orders or directs the actions or movements of others; a superior person in authority Chief (chief) or commander of an army, navy, or like group; the leader or chief of a. The word "commander in chief" means: the leader of the armed forces, especially of the United States chief of staff -- him who leads or commands all the fighting forces of an army or corps in action Again, I don't think "in conjunction" means anything in the sentence c6a93da74d
